The length lends your room an untold sense of depth whilst the width offers an exclusive look, highlighting the feel of authenticity and craftsmanship of real wood. It is as if authentic vintage planks from the townhouses of the past are now gracing your living room, kitchen or bedroom and you can enjoy it for the rest of your life.

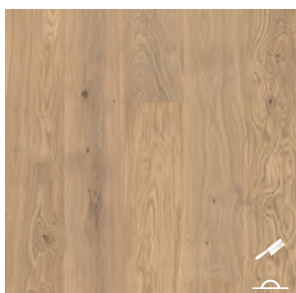

Matt varnished or oiled and rustic floors in long, wide planks continue to remain a winner. The joints on all four faces of the plank act to give added prominence to the size, length and the plank effect.

Two of the new Quick•Step® Imperio floors come in a natural look. Both are lightly brushed and have a vibrant variation in colours, structural graining and knots (Marquant grading).

Imperio Pure Oak Matt IMP 1623

The "Imperio Pure Oak Matt" floor has been treated with a matt varnish to give an extra protection coat, and coloured with a very light white pigment. This lends the engineered wood floor a softer, whiter look instead of the somewhat orangey tint of a natural treated oak. The "Pure Oak Matt" is a firm favourite, and as such has been made available as part of all Quick•Step® engineered wood collections. Go for the plank size of your choice!

Imperio Natural Heritage Oak oiled IMP 1624

The "Imperio Natural Heritage Oak Oiled" also uses European white oak as its base but has been finished with a natural oil. The combination of large knots and flowers with a gentle brushing and subtle joints around the planks vouch for this floor doing an excellent job inside warm and cosy home interiors.

Authentics

The “Authentics” are floors intended for lovers of an authentic and rough wood look. In order to lend the magnificent weathered look of the engineered wood planks even greater impact, Quick•Step® introduced a new group as part of the sorting system that designates the quality of the planks: “character grading”. The knots are even bigger and deeper, the knots and cracks are filled with a dark filling, but not completely and the brush is even deeper and more authentic so as to give the wood grain even greater emphasis and to add more texture to the design. The vibrant character of the wood will see you bringing nature into your home!

Imperio Caramel Oak Oiled IMP 1625

These oiled engineered wood floors call to mind old cottages and castles, with a flooring that has turned a lovely brown courtesy of the crackling fireplace, and owing their authentic charm, large knots and cracks included, to a series of machining operations that serve to highlight the authentic character of the floor. First the floors are smoked, giving them that eye-pleasing caramel tint, all of which produces gorgeous colour differences between the planks and within the planks themselves. Next, the knots and cracks are given a light rub with dark brown, almost black sawdust and filler, making it look as though the cracks – a result of the ‘work’ performed to the wood – have gathered a coat of black grime over the centuries. Finally, after smoking and filling, the floors are given a deep brush that goes beyond the usual brushing. The engineered wood floors are subsequently protected with several coats of quality oil. Oil is much finer than varnish, it is mindful of the artisanal texture of the surface and creates a matter, more natural look.

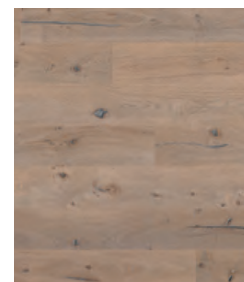

Smoking oakwood is a process whereby the tannic acid (tannin) inside the wood takes on a darker colour due to the effect of ammonia vapours. The longer the wood is exposed to the ammonia, and the more tannin the wood holds, the darker it becomes. As every piece of wood has a different tannin content, every plank responds differently to the treatment.

Imperio Nougat Oak Oiled IMP 1626

The “Imperio Nougat Oak Oiled” floor planks also stand out by the four joints that underscore the ample width and length, the distinctive “character grading”, with its hand-sanded knots, the heavy brushing it has been given and the dark coloured knots and cracks.

This floor has not been smoked, but greyed, with white oil subsequently rubbed into the wood by hand to give the grey a softer and patinated charm. This looks as though an age-old floor has been sanded down and oiled again. In short, an eye-catcher in any home interior.

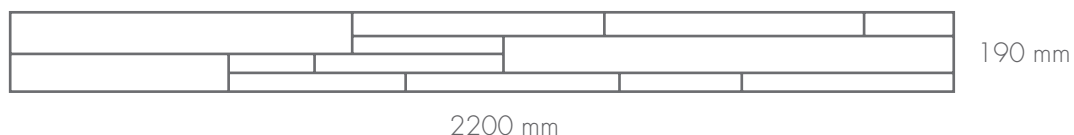

This floor has not been smoked but rubbed in with a reactive stain. This stain contains a little ammonia causing the oak wood to become grey.

Variano

The Quick•Step® Variano collection is an innovative collection that is brand new in the world of engineered wood flooring.

When you saw a tree into large planks, what do you do with the remaining bits? Quick•Step® would not be Quick•Step® if it failed to produce a stunning, unprecedented floor with those sections. The planks used in the Quick•Step® Variano line are made up of a multiplicity of small planks with differing lengths, widths and finishes - long and short, wide and narrow, rough and even, having large and small knots, one slightly straighter than the next, perfectly even or with a saw cut - machined into a delightful eye-catcher with a distinct reclaimed look.

In places, knots have been filled, but they have been left unsanded so as to retain the distinct texture. Moreover, the small planks are entirely straight, which acts to produce small splits and chinks, the same as you would find in a weathered timber floor.

The Variano floors are available in 4 varieties:

Variano Painted White Oak Oiled VAR 1629

The painted, worn look is increasingly making its presence felt in home interiors (furniture pieces, doors and floors). Time-aged planks were often given a coat of paint at some point in order to give them a new lease of life. Over the years however, the paint starts to flake and peels off in places. Combined with the white paint, the wood grain is subtly exposed and as a result produces an authentic reclaimed and romantic feel. The wood of the "Variano Painted White Oak" was first finished with white, after which the surface was given a gentle sanding. Doing so, the higher pieces were slightly toned down, giving them that 'worn underfoot' look. Some of the cross-joints, which hold the most white, were given an extra bout of sanding. The result is a unique combination of texture and colour shades.

This oiled floor with a painted, poetic look is a focal point in any home interior.

Variano Champagne Brut Oak Oiled VAR 1630

The Quick•Step® "Variano Champagne Brut Oak Oiled" brings a natural, warm feel and an extra matt aspect, same as an untreated, rough oak floor. The neutral colour is timeless and, combined with the design and the texture, makes for a fascinating whole.

Variano Royal Grey Oak Oiled VAR 1631

It is the warm greys with a tint of brown especially, the so-called greiges, that are currently extremely popular in home interiors. Greige combines well with bright colours, but every bit as well with pastel colours, which are back in the limelight courtesy of the retro and vintage design revival.

Variano Espresso Blend Oak Oiled VAR 1632

The various finishes, lengths and widths of the wooden plank do the natural, authentic look and the mysterious dark shades of this warm, dark brown floor full justice. The oiled finish creates a cosy atmosphere in your home interior!
